Albino alligator hatches at US' Florida reptile park for the third year in a row

A Florida alligator park announced the hatching of an albino alligator for the third year in a row. World Florida Alligator & Gator Park in Kissimmee announced that still holds eight more eggs. The baby's parents, Spunkie and Blizzard, are also albino, meaning their babies are almost guaranteed to be albino. The park said it is the only location in the world to successfully breed albino alligators. The recent hatching marked the third year that the albino parents have had an albino baby.
